DGAP Memo

Die Zukunft der US-Ukrainehilfe ist ungewiss

Deutschland muss seine Unterstützung beschleunigen und ausbauen

Die Unterstützung der USA ist seit Kriegsbeginn für die Ukraine unverzichtbar. Doch wie es nach der US-Wahl um sie steht, bleibt ungewiss. Deutschland und Europa müssen ihre Unterstützung dringend erweitern, beschleunigen und verstetigen, um der Ukraine künftig schneller und mehr militärische Ausrüstung zur Verfügung stellen zu können. Im Fall eines Wahlsiegs von Trump sollten sie auf seinen transaktionalen Politikstil eingehen, aber deutlich machen, dass sie keine Verhandlungslösungen akzeptieren, die auf Kosten der Ukraine gehen.

Divided by the Atlantic: Classical Liberals and Libertarians on International Order

Abstract

Classical liberals have been more preoccupied by domestic policy and institutions than by international affairs. This paper makes the case for a classical liberal foreign policy outlook that could address the collective challenges facing free societies. In the United States, libertarian foreign policy thinking has been outsourced to structural realism.

However, in the form in which it is deployed to make the case for restraint, such realism often contradicts basic analytic and normative tenets of classical liberalism. The current international situation is a wake-up call for classical liberals to rethink and update their foreign policy intuition to an era in which the international environment seems less conducive to classical liberal values than much of the post-war period.

Discussion Paper - Belfer Center for Science and International Affairs, Harvard Kennedy School

From Stalemate to Settlement

This white paper attempts to apply history to illuminate possible paths forward but is neither a detailed blueprint for peace nor an intricate playbook for how negotiations should proceed. With any negotiated settlement, the devil is in the details, and questions such as the prosecution of war crimes, repatriation of prisoners of war (POWs), reparations, and specific territorial lines will undoubtedly be debated fiercely by Moscow and Kyiv. The specific contours of any deal will be ironed out at the negotiating table. Additionally, significant negotiations are unlikely to take place in the lame-duck period prior to the US presidential election. Our recommendations are therefore not an immediate call for action but guidelines for policymakers if and when Ukraine decides to negotiate.

Leveraging Killed China's Bid for Leadership

Key Points

- China's debt performance over the past 15 years, including the entirety of General Secretary Xi Jinping's rule, has been historically awful—far worse than America's, even while the US has been fiscally irresponsible.
- Monetary indicators suggest that China's debt situation will continue to slowly deteriorate for the next few years.
- Even if America's debt situation deteriorates as well, the size gap between the two economies indicates China cannot catch up while carrying so much debt.
