La dependencia inferencial de América Latina

América Latina está ingresando en la transición tecnológica más trascendente del siglo sin la capacidad computacional que necesita y en medio de una profunda crisis educativa. En ese proceso, la región está erosionando la facultad que menos puede permitirse perder: la capacidad de extraer inferencias a partir de la evidencia, razonar de manera independiente ante problemas complejos y convertir el conocimiento en acciones políticas con consecuencias. En conjunto, estos dos déficits corren el riesgo de empujar a América Latina hacia una nueva forma de dependencia: la confianza en sistemas automatizados, predominantemente extranjeros, para que infieran, clasifiquen y, cada vez más, decidan en su nombre.

Gane quien gane, ¿por qué será difícil gobernar Brasil?

Las elecciones de octubre no resolverán uno de los principales problemas de gobernabilidad del país: el presupuesto. Durante la última década, el Congreso ganó capacidad para decidir sobre una parte creciente del gasto federal y redujo el margen de negociación del Ejecutivo.

Despite a renewed political emphasis on environmental protection and social sustainability in the Brazilian Amazon, illicit gold mining in the region remains a major threat to ecosystems and indigenous peoples.
