Principles and Policies for Competition

By Michael Mazza

Key Points

The United States and the People's Republic of China (PRC) are now locked in a broadly adversarial relationship and engaged in a strategic competition. This is due to the fundamental incompatibility of US and PRC worldviews, visions for global order, and strategic frameworks—and the PRC's rise to global power status.

The United States and the PRC, along with their like-minded allies and partners, are vying for a preponderance of power in the international system.

To secure a preponderance of power for the US-led coalition, the United States should abide by nine guidelines and impose on itself three guardrails as it wages competition with China.

Intergovernmental Grants and Policy Competition: Concepts, Institutions, and Evidence

By Stan Veuger | Jeffrey Clemens

Abstract

Our purpose is three-fold. First, we summarize some of the core insights from both classic and more recent papers in the literature on the role of intergovernmental grants in systems of fiscal federalism. Second, we provide an updated look at some of the key institutions through which intergovernmental transfers are implemented in the United States. Third, we consider the rich environment of the COVID-19 pandemic in which new additional intergovernmental transfers were deployed, and present empirical evidence on how they affected state-level corporate tax policy. We conclude by discussing productive directions for future research on the economics of fiscal federalism and the role of intergovernmental grants as policy instruments in federal systems.
